AIR FILTRATION

WHAT IS MERV?

The American Society of Heating, Refrigerating, and Air Conditioning Engineers (ASHRAE) designed the Minimum Efficiency Reporting Value (MERV) scale to rate the effectiveness of air filters.

MERV RATINGS

Higher MERV ratings mean healthier breathing environments. The higher the MERV number, the more airborne particulates are being filtered, like dust, mold spores, tobacco smoke, pet dander, pollen, and more.

MORE EFFICIENT FILTERS MEAN BETTER HVAC EFFICIENCY

High-performing air conditioner and furnace filters keep your heating and cooling system clean and working efficiently and can extend the life of your HVAC unit. The higher the MERV rating, the more efficient the air filter is at removing particulates from the air. MERV 8 air filters are disposable, made from synthetic fiber, and should be changed about every three months.

WHAT DOES YOUR FILTER CAPTURE?

MERV	PARTICLE (micron)	CAPTURE RATE
4	3.0	20%
6	3.0	50%
11	1.0	80%
15	0.3	90%

WHAT'S A MICRON?

1 micron = 0.00000393 inches - or - 1/25,400 inch. The human eye can see down to about 35 microns. One grain of table salt is between 90 and 110 microns.

LIGHTING

How Light Affects Color

Do you have the right light bulbs for your property?

You can use light to accentuate a room or areas around your property. However, if the wrong bulb is used, the room can look dull, dark, and even dirty. Why is that?

The eye perceives light differently based on the combinations of light wavelengths. Something that looks bright green in the light of noontime may look darker or more red near sunset, or grayish-black in the twilight hours.

Minimum Light Output (Lumens)	Watts
	Incandescent	Compact Fluorescent	LED
1,600	100	24-28	1-22
1,100	75	18-20	13-16
800	60	13-15	9-12
450	40	9-11	6-8
200	25	3-5	2-4

Light Brightness In Lumens By Bulb Type

Take a look at how the bulb's brightness (Lumens) compares with energy consumption (Watts).

Understanding The Lighting Facts Label

- How much light (lumens) does this bulb provide?
- How many volts does this light bulb require?
- What is the average life of the bulb?
- What is the CCT of the bulb?
- How much energy (watts) is used by the bulb?
- What is the CRI of the bulb?

Lumens	The amount of light produced by the bulb in Lumens.
Volts	Electrical supply required by the bulb.
Life	The average number of hours the bulb is expected to last.
CCT	The appearance of the light color expressed in Kelvins.
Watts	Unit of energy used to power the bulb.
CRI	The ability of the bulb to correctly render the color of an object.

SIMPLE STEPS TO HELP IDENTIFY AND TREAT GUEST ROOM ODORS

There's nothing less inviting than walking into a hotel room with odors. Hotel guest room odors can have several possible causes. These odors can cost you repeat customers and room revenue, so it's important to act fast. The following three steps will help you keep odors under control.

Identify The Cause

The first step is to train your staff to check for and identify odors and their causes. Have your staff check trash cans, carpeting, bedding, drapes, upholstered furniture, closets, microwaves, and PTAC units.

Most bathroom odors come from mold and mildew. Keeping shower and sink drains clean and free from hair and debris will keep those areas odor-free.

Treat The Odor

Once you have identified the odor and its source, you can treat the problem. Keeping the rooms clean and dry is the first step.

Some odors can be remedied by regularly laundering blankets, bedspreads, pillows, and drapes, even if they do not appear used or visibly dirty. For stubborn odors that seem to penetrate the entire room, consider using an ozone deodorizer or air abatement system.

For PTACs, use condensation tablets to manage the bacteria/algae growth and reduce odors.

In the bathroom, use caulk and grout for any cracks, or where cleaning products aren't working.

Be Proactive

Make sure odor control is part of housekeeping's and maintenance's daily routines. Set up quarterly deep-cleaning and preventative-maintenance programs to attack odors. Keeping the rooms and bathrooms dry and well ventilated is the key to maintaining a mold- and mildew-free space. Your guests will appreciate their fresh-smelling rooms, rather than wondering, "What's that awful smell?"
